Examples of studio art and interdisciplinary study for undergraduate students:

Marketing Authenticity: Craft, Commodity, and Culture (Spring, 2012)

Full-time one-quarter-long class taught with faculty in economics and Latin American studies. We focused on various cases of craft production, their connections to systems of power, and the ways competing notions of "authenticity" are expressed in them. We examined the factors shaping artistic production in each case: who or what decides the form a given craft may take, its relationship to "tradition" and who profits from its sales. Ultimately, we asked: given all the challenges, how might specific groups use art and craftsmanship to improve their own lives?

Art and Religious Practice (2007-08), (2010-11)

Full-time program of study that combined fine metalworking, printmaking, religious studies, and art history. We examined art and craft in the way they have historically been held in the service of religion in order to capture the fleeting moments of ritual. How could we better understand religion by examining, and making, images and objects that reflect these rituals? How has visual art supported and challenged religious practice?

Working Small (2006-07)

Full-time, two-quarter-long class for advanced visual art students working in fine metals and mixed media sculpture, exploring the aesthetics of small-scale art. Activities included intensive studio work, critique, reading, seminar, writing assignments, and research. Students examined issues such as miniaturization, portability, the intensification and exaggeration of form, virtuosity, and imagination.

Weird and Wondrous (2002-03)

This full-time freshman program integrated studies in literature, studio art, and other disciplines to explore the experience and implications of encountering the unfamiliar, that which exists outside conventional structures and crosses boundaries. As one student wrote in her self-evaluation, "Confronting the strange, experiencing the heart palpitating combination of fear and awe that is wonder, is the beginning of learning. Wonder exists at the center of passion, at the heart of a scientist's search for answers, an artist's vision of expanded consciousness."
