Examples of studio art and interdisciplinary, collaborative team-teaching:

Marketing Authenticity: Craft, Commodity, and Culture (Spring, 2012).

Full-time program of study taught with Faculty in both Economics and Latin American Studies. We focused on examples of craft production around the world, their connections to systems of power, and the ways competing notions of "authenticity" are expressed in them. We examined the factors shaping artistic production in each case: who or what decides the form a given craft may take, its relationship to "tradition," and who profits from its sales? Ultimately, we asked: how might specific groups use art and craftsmanship to improve their own lives?

Art and Religious Practice (Fall-Winter, 2007-08), (Fall-Winter, 2010-11).

Full-time program of study where I taught 3-D, a colleague taught 2-D, and we shared lectures in humanities in an integrated study of fine metalworking, printmaking, religious studies, and art history. We examined how art and craft have historically been held in the service of religion in order to capture the fleeting moments of ritual. How could we better understand religion by examining, and making, images and objects that reflect these rituals? How has visual art supported and challenged religious practice?

Weird and Wondrous (Fall-Winter, 2002-03).

Full-time freshman program of study where I taught studio art with a Faculty in Literature and Psychology. We explored the experience and implications of encountering the unfamiliar, that which exists outside conventional structures and crosses boundaries. As one student wrote in her self-evaluation: "Confronting the strange, experiencing the heart palpating combination of fear and awe that is wonder, is the beginning of learning. Wonder exists at the center of passion, at the heart of a scientist's search for answers, an artist's vision of expanded consciousness."
